Active Poetry Ewa Partum 1971-1973 (screenshots of glitches)

Very early in her career, Ewa Partum developed both a taste for visual poetry and attention to public space. The artist rapidly subverted, for example, the prescriptive discourse governing street signs: in Legality of Space (1971), one of her first works, she “uprooted” street signs from the streets of Łódź and replanted them—as a sort of irony—in Freedom Square. Some of the instructions, modified to create contradictory injunctions such as “_prohibition prohibited_,” translated the absurdity of authoritarian discourse in the People’s Republic of Poland at the time. Similarly, the white letters which she scattered in Active Poetry used an official propaganda tool of the 1970s: ready-mades available in all school supplies stores, often used to compose communist banners.

Partum subverted the machine of political indoctrination and its “ready-to-use” discourse, but also challenged the determinism of a language immobilized by the rules of grammar, syntax, and spelling… By scattering these white letters first around the city, then in the countryside, she opted for a continuous redistribution of meaning. Passers’-by footsteps, rolling waves, or the wind would carry on the dispersal. In 1971, the artist took passages from Goethe, Proust, Joyce, and Kafka, and mixed up the order of typographic characters (An Excerpt from Faust by Goethe, An Excerpt from A la recherche du temps perdu by Proust, etc.). This dislocation resembles Dadaist practices, such as randomly drawing words cut out from a newspaper, as described by Tristan Tzara. However, Partum doesn’t use chance as the organizing principle since the letters never produce any stable composition. The scattering of Active Poetry, realized between 1971 and 1973, generated a wind-blown flux of letters, fated to lose unity and meaning. Literally and figuratively, the artist accomplished the dissemination of logocentrism and its hierarchies, for the sake of the incommunicable and the imagination.

In 1972, Partum created the gallery Adres in Łódź, whose name, “address,” signaled a postal mission dedicated to mail art. “A place, situation, opportunity, offering information, proposals, documentation, speculation, provocation, exposition of every possible presence of art, or reasons for not showing it,” Adres was an extension of Ewa Partum’s artistic activity and the site of some of her exhibitions. It was also a platform for communication and exchange with artists from the otherwise inaccessible West. In 1975, however, the artist abandoned poetry in order to concentrate on more urgent problems and undertake a series of feminist performances.

Yugen, ed, Leroi Jones, 1958 - 1962, NYC
http://realitystudio.org/bibliographic-bunker/yugen/

"Yugen is often described as a Beat outlet. Work by Allen Ginsberg, William Burroughs, Gregory Corso, Jack Kerouac, Gary Snyder and Philip Whalen definitely appears frequently, but I think the content is much broader than that. Yugen billed itself as a “new consciousness in arts and letters.” The poetry dovetailed with the groundbreaking and monumental New American Poetry anthology of Don Allen published in 1959/1960. Jones included the New York School (Frank O’Hara, Kenneth Koch), Black Mountain (Charles Olson, Robert Creeley, Joel Oppenheimer, Fielding Dawson), and San Francisco Renaissance (Robin Blaser) poets alongside a healthy helping of the Beats. The Black Mountain poets made a very strong showing." (Jed Birmingham)

My Own Mag (ed, Jeff Nuttall) 1963 - 1966, London
"My Own Mag is a bibliographic nightmare. There is no general consensus on the correct order of the first eight issues of the seventeen issue run. This might be by design. Nuttall, like Ed Sanders, possessed a devilish air and a flair for the bibliographically ridiculous. In an effort to frustrate and confuse collectors as well as parody the numbering of magazines, Sanders altered his bibliographic system at issue five and then continued sequentially from there for eight more issues." (Jed Birmingham)
"But there is a bibliographical trail and it’s laid in the strip cartoon “Perfume Jack” " (Robert Bank) http://realitystudio.org/bibliographic-bunker/my-own-mag/perfume-jack/

http://realitystudio.org/bibliographic-bunker/c-press-archive/c-press-index-intro/
"C is also a fine example of a case where mimeo mags should be judged on a different scale regarding condition. C is comprised of mimeograph legal sheets, stapled three times on the left-hand side. The legal size makes the magazine difficult to store. In addition, the magazine was poorly stapled. Berrigan seemed not to possess an industrial stapler, because often the staples just barely hold the mag together. C was also a legend in its own time and, unlike some mags, was actually read. Obsessively in fact. As a result, C is nearly always beat-up and falling apart. If present at all, the last few pages are rarely attached." (Jed Birmingham)

http://realitystudio.org/bibliographic-bunker/floating-bear/
Floating Bear (eds, Diane DiPrima & Leroi Jones) 1961-1971, NYC & San Francisco
" Leroi Jones left as editor with Issue 25, and Diane Di Prima took over full editorial duties. Issue 27 has a cover page like the title page of a book. By Issue 28, there are pictorial covers by a host of important artists like George Herms, Jess, and Wallace Berman. You can see the geographical shift from New York to California as well. Herms, Jess, and Berman were all active in the California art scene that moved between Los Angeles and San Francisco. Billy Linich otherwise known as Billy Name, the man who made Warhol's Factory silver, assists with a few issues after Jones's departure. This suggests Floating Bear's links to the speed culture of the New York art scene in the 1960s." (Jed Birmingham) and collectors interested in the relics of the mimeo revolution. One proof of this is a recent publication by Bottom Dog Press: d.a. levy and the mimeograph revolution. The book, edited by Larry Smith and Ingrid Swanberg, delves deep into the life and work of levy far beyond the usual mythmaking." (Jed Birmingham)

New Wilderness Letter, ed, Jerome Rothenberg, 1977 - 1984, NYC
Jerome Rothenberg's impressive twelve-issue magazine New Wilderness Letter picks up precisely where Alcheringa left off, with a decisive change: "the present work will be more open – more 'coarse and broad' in Whitman's vision for poetry & consciousness – than the previous one." Having departed from the ethnopoetics focus of Alcheringa in 1976, Rothenberg delivered an expansive notion of poesis in his new magazine. David Antin outlines this territory in the first issue: "those linguistic acts of invention & discovery through which the mind explores the transformational power of language & discourse & invents the world & itself."

Infolio, ed, Tom Raworth, 1986 - 1991, Cambridge, UK
https://jacket2.org/reissues/infolio
For both cover and interior, Raworth reproduced submissions of original manuscripts. In this way, from a media archeological perspective, the magazine records the writing tools of each of its contributors — or, as Raworth notes, "strange now to think there was a time when one could recognise a friend's typewriting."

Constraints
"Write the poem. The poem unlocks hell." [Jerome Rothenberg, ca. 1960)
Unlocks it by writing a door and going through.
Language is a prison, writing is a door.
And so on.
As to the homoeophonic (not homophonic, not same sound, but like sound, like enough, just like enough to get something started):

L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E Magazine, eds Bruce Andrews & Charles Bernstein, 1978 - 1981, NYC
http://eclipsearchive.org/projects/LANGUAGE/language.html
Bruce Andrews, in an interview, in 2005: "I don't sit down and write poems. The major technical innovation in my writing occurred about 25 years ago when I bought a paper cutter. And for the last 25 years all of my writing is done on small pieces of paper that are cut-up on this paper cutter. I take a pile of sheets and cut them into six, so that's two by three inch cards. I generate what I call raw material, just all the time, as a constant part of my everyday life. So pretty much wherever I am I have a little pile of my cards and I'll write on those pieces of paper a single word, a phrase that I think of, a couple of words of a little cluster of words and I'll take those cards and put them in boxes, mostly wine-boxes and I'll fill a box every six months or year with tens of thousands of these cards. When I want to write a piece on a certain subject matter or with certain tonal quality I'll go through them and I'll find things that relate to that project and I'll pull them out, and then I'll sit on my sofa with a pile of cards and I'll literally edit that project out of this collection. And I'll do that years after I wrote the material. So when I'll be editing that poem, I'll have no memory of having written the words, so I'll have no attachment to the material. I'll look at the material just as I would as a reader looking at somebody else's work. "

TapRoot is a quarterly publication of Independent, Underground, and Experimental language-centered arts. Over the past 10 years, we have published 40 collections of poetry, writing, and visio-verbal art in a variety of formats. In the Summer of 1992, we began assembling contact information and reviews of like-minded publications, and distributing them as part of a local (Cleveland Ohio) poetry tabloid, the Cleveland Review. This posting is an experiment, to test the practicality of (and interest in) distributing this information through the Net. Your response and comments are vital in determining the fate of this project.

"At a time when many were looking in other directions, Bernadette Mayer & Vito Acconci provided one of the truly germinal magazines in which experiments in poetry & language could be gathered & aimed toward an unforeseen future. 0 TO 9 they called it and made of it a necessary place for new beginnings. Nearly four decades on, the thrill of their enterprise persists in these pages newly reprinted—amazing to look at against all that has transpired, more amazing to consider what remains to be done." —JEROME ROTHENBERG, Professor Emeritus, University of California, San Diego

http://imforthebirds.blogspot.com/2009/02/0-to-9-complete-magazine-1967-1969.html
"For instance, the six blank pages that comprise issue six have been photocopied from an original copy of the magazine, instead of being represented by six clean sheets. These six photocopied pages, though, encapsulate the tension of Ugly Duckling's reissue, as the reader is confronted with a shelf-ready reproduction of the disposable. A relic of the disposable to save for future reference." (Allen Mozek)

"Perhaps Aspen was a folly, but it was a vastly pleasurable one, with a significant place in art history. The list of contributors included some of the most interesting artists of the 20th Century. And as an examplar of creative publishing, Aspen was a wonder. Its contents, however, are all but lost: few copies of Aspen have survived. The aim of this web site is to make these contents accessible again."

Photostatic/Retrofuturism (ed, Lloyd Dunn) 1983 - 1989 [1998], Iowa City, IA

"PhotoStatic was a magazine, a periodical series of printed works that focused on xerography as the source of a particular visual language that was widely used by graphic artists in the various art and music underground scenes of the 80s and 90s. During this time, the publication served as a forum to collect and redistribute artworks that originated in these scenes. Eventually, its scope extended to embrace not only graphic works, but also concrete poetry, correspondence art, ephemera from works in other media, essays, fiction, reviews, and reports on various cultural scenes, including Neoism, the home taping community, the zine community, and mail art.

Founded by editor Lloyd Dunn in 1983, the magazine continued in some form until as late as 1998. It inevitably underwent several transformations; for example, in 1987, to reflect changing interests, the zine was renamedRetrofuturism, and became closely associated with the intermedia groupThe Tape-beatles*. At the end of 1989, at the height of its circulation, the title ceased publication in observance of the Neoist Art Strike 1990-1993*. (Dunn also went abroad to live for a time shortly after this*.)
After re-emerging in the mid-nineties as Psrf (letters chosen to reflect both earlier titles), the project was not again able to find traction. The internet boom was well underway, and so it seemed that the cultural moment for this type of publication had simply passed on."

to Tomislav
John Carlos on Muhammed Ali
" It's not the responsibility of the oppressor to educate us. We have to educate ourselves and our own. That's the difference between Muhammad Ali and Michael Jordan. Muhammad Ali will never die. He used his skill to say something about the social ills of society. Of course, he was an excellent boxer, but he got up and spoke on the issues. And because he spoke on the issues, he will never die. There will be someone else at some time who can do what Jordan could do. And then his name will just be pushed down in the mud. But they'll still be talking about Ali."
